Dundas & Wilson announce leadership changes

Dundas & Wilson, a leading UK legal practice, has announced news of changes to the firm's leadership.

Chris Campbell has been reappointed as Managing Partner of D&W until April 2010. Chris's reappointment demonstrates the confidence of the Partners about the direction of D&W's strategy, the firm's commitment to that strategy and the role which Chris will play in implementing that strategy – and recognises Chris's outstanding achievement in the role to date.

The firm also announced that Chairman Neil Cochran, who earlier this year announced his plans to step down as Chairman in June 2005, will be succeeded by Partner Michael McAuley, head of D&W's Government Services Group. Neil will however remain with D&W as a consultant in the role of Practice Director for three years.

Chris Campbell said "It's a significant bonus for us to be retaining the experience and skill of Neil Cochran as Practice Director when he steps down as Chairman next year. He has made an invaluable contribution to the success of D&W and its development over the past two decades and has been of immense support both to the management team, and to me on a personal level.

"Michael McAuley is a worthy successor to Neil, and will provide leadership and direction in the strategic development of the firm. Michael will continue with his client work as before, but will naturally now spend more time on leadership issues as D&W moves forward to further success."

Issued by the BIG partnership on behalf of Dundas & Wilson CS LLP.
