October 2005

D&W announce a further 3 London partners

D&W have announced the appointment of a further 3 partner lateral hires in London, bringing the partner tally to 5 since January 2005.

Mark Tiggeman has joined D&W's Construction & Engineering team, adding contentious construction expertise to the team's existing strong construction law capability. Mark joins us from a leading English international law firm specialising in construction law and brings with him excellent credentials, both domestically and internationally in major construction disputes. His experience spans numerous jurisdictions and various methods of dispute resolution including litigation, arbitration, mediation and conciliation. Mark is also highly experienced in commercial dispute resolution with particular expertise in cross border disputes.

Ian McNeill has joined D&W's Projects Group, where his focus is on growing D&W's energy-related business beyond the firm's existing client base. D&W already has strong UK energy sector credentials and Ian, who was formerly a projects partner in the corporate group of an international commercial law firm, has a wealth of knowledge and experience which will undoubtedly enhance the further development of D&W's energy practice.

Graham Paul joins D&W's employment team on 7 November where his focus will be on developing D&W's advisory practice in London. Graham joins from a niche employment practice and his appointment comes at a time of real opportunity for D&W's employment team as it is experiencing growth in English law based instructions.

Neil Cochran, D&W Chief Executive said: 'Having stated our intention to grow our London practice in a focused way, we are delighted with the calibre of new partners we are attracting. All of these appointments are in line with our strategy to develop our London practice, enabling us to extend our service range, enhancing the support available to our clients as well as opening up opportunities with new clients.'

D&W also recently announced the appointment of Simon Sale as a private equity partner based in London. Simon joins D&W shortly.
